How did the Fund perform last year and what affected its performance?

The Fund’s Institutional Shares returned 2.79% for the trailing twelve months ended July 31, 2025, underperforming the Bloomberg US Aggregate Bond Index (the “benchmark”), which returned 3.38%.

U.S. fixed-income sectors generated positive returns over the period. Credit sectors produced positive returns over duration-equivalent government bonds as spreads compressed, with higher-yielding sectors generally performing best. Most global sovereign yields ended broadly higher, after fluctuating extensively during the period, and yield curves steepened across most regions. In particular, the second part of the period was marked by increased volatility stemming from concerns over growth, inflation, and U.S. economic policies.

The primary detractor from benchmark-relative results was the Fund’s duration and yield-curve positioning, as the portfolio was positioned with a longer duration position relative to the benchmark for most of the period, which detracted from performance as interest rates rose. This offset otherwise strong contributions from the Fund’s credit positioning. Throughout the period, the Fund maintained an underweight to investment-grade (IG) corporate bonds in favor of high-yield credit, bank loans, taxable municipal bonds, and securitized sectors where the Fund’s Subadviser observed more attractive risk and reward profiles. Within securitized sectors, positive results were led by the Fund’s overweight allocation to commercial mortgage-backed securities (CMBS). Its allocation to agency mortgage-backed securities (MBS) also helped performance despite a spike in interest-rate volatility. The Fund’s overweight allocation to taxable municipals, as well as out-of-benchmark allocations to high-yield credit and banks loans, also aided performance, benefiting from their coupon advantage. These contributions helped to offset a detractor from the Fund’s underweight to IG corporates, particularly in Industrials.
